The University of Nebraska-Lincoln is seeking motivated and enthusiastic students who are interested in pursuing graduate training in bullying prevention and intervention research and practice. The Department of Educational Psychology has developed a bullying research emphasis with opportunities for students pursuing Ph.D., Masters, and Ed.S. degrees. Students in this emphasis have the opportunity to work in one of several research labs with a focus in developmental psychology, educational neuroscience, or school psychology. Interested applicants can check out our website (http://cehs.unl.edu/empowerment) for more information.

Please contact one of our faculty members for more details:

Dr. Meredith Martin at meredith.martin@unl.edu
(Developmental focus)

Dr. Hideo Suzuki at hsuzuki2@unl.edu
(Neuroscience focus)

Dr. Susan Swearer at sswearer@unl.edu
(School psychology focus)

Prospective applicants can apply here http://cehs.unl.edu/edpsych/how-apply/.
Application deadline is December 1, 2018.

We look forward to hearing from you!
