The Empowerment Initiative: Ending Bullying through Developmental, Neuroscience, & Translational Research

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln is seeking motivated and enthusiastic undergraduate psychology students who are interested in pursuing graduate training in bullying prevention and intervention research and practice. The Department of Educational Psychology has developed a bullying research emphasis with opportunities for students pursuing Ph.D., Masters, and Ed.S. degrees. Students in this emphasis have the opportunity to work in one of several research labs with a focus in developmental psychology, educational neuroscience, or school psychology. Interested applicants can check out our website (http://cehs.unl.edu/empowerment) for more information.

Interested applicants should email:

Dr. Meredith Martin at meredith.martin@unl.edu (Developmental focus)

or

Dr. Hideo Suzuki at hsuzuki2@unl.edu
(Neuroscience focus)

or

Dr. Susan Swearer at ssweeney@unl.edu
(School psychology focus)

Prospective applicants can apply here http://cehs.unl.edu/edpsych/how-apply/.
Application deadline is December 1, 2017.

We look forward to hearing from you!
